Zaheer Mirza Hi Rudolf Faix ... thank you for posting this ... I urge calm discussion in this ... those who agree give reasons rather than be swayed by emotions ... and those that disagree please give reasons based on Quran and Hadith (life of prophet Muhammad PBUH) ... this is not easy ... but essential dialogue if we are to reduce/eliminate divides. Rudolf Faix Everyone should recognize religion as something for what it was originally intended. It has been the base which made the coexistence in a community without people killing each other possible. In other words, it has been the first law. The religious found out their own power over the people and modified the rules into their own favor. For this reason you'll a lot of different religions based on the same story is getting found at the world. Weniger anzeigen

Zaheer Mirza Discussing behaviour needs to be the starting point ... discussing if it is causing significant adverse impact on others ... understanding the drivers for that behaviour ... as there could be complex interaction of the tablet-age, ignorance, political agenda, etc. as well as religious zeal.

So I urge discussions from behaviour end please.

Also we need to use words/tone that gets across the sincerity of wanting to be educated and helping others with their education. Thanks. Weniger anzeigen

Zaheer Mirza What people believe in is their personal matter ... we should only talk about how it impacts us ... we are not here to discuss merits of theologies and doctrines ... but rather the actions of others that are making our lives unbearable and then understanding the root causes of the behaviour. Please stay focused on that.

Rudolf Faix @Zaheer Mirza, I stay focused on the root causes, but for this purpose you need to know something about the sources too. For example one religion differs to the Islam and Christianity a lot, but it has also the same result in their teachings. It is the Buddhism. If you compare this 3 religions than you'll see that you'll get the same result only on a different way.

Zaheer Mirza Rudolf Faix ... I agree that a religion regulates "life" for its believers. All I am saying is let's focus on the "life" and how it affects others ... and not worry about other aspects of the belief.

So what are the practices you see around you that:

- 1) you deem to be having an adverse impact on you or your loved ones?
- 2) you regard as a direct consequence of a particular doctrine?

This takes us forward ... we need to be specific. Weniger anzeigen

Rudolf Faix If you are moving to another country with another culture then you have to accept the rules and law from this country. In such a case you have to integrate yourself into the community and not the existing community has to change themselves into your favor. Your traditions even be illegal in the country where you have been moving. So you have to inform yourself before about that what is for you important and what is not important for you. The freedom of religion ends at this point where it breaks the local state law. Weniger anzeigen

Rudolf Faix I'll give you an example from this week happened in Austria (Europe). Some Muslims have rented a pasture and kept there 131 sheep. This week they started to slaughter the sheep. People who have seen it called the police and the this Muslims ended up in jail. The rule is very simple. In Europe have even animals rights and slaughtering in the Muslim tradition is only allowed in a slaughterhouse and if a veterinary is present who gives anesthesia to the sheep. If someone does not accept the law, then he will end up in jail and after he has passed his sentence he will get deported and get never again a residence permit in Europe. By the way only 52 sheep have survived the massacre. Weniger anzeigen

Rudolf Faix Maqsood Ahmad \(L.I.O.N\), there is nowhere written that Muslims are Jihadists. Thank you for views on outside influence ... Rudolf is using as reference Imam Abdurrahman ibn Abdulaziz as-Sudais: "Oh Allah, give victory, honor, and power our brothers, the jihadists in Yemen, in Syria, in Iraq, around the world. Let them triumph over the treacherous Jews, the malicious Christians and the unreliable hypocrites!"

Assuming this is what was said ...

I can understand the sentiment/emotion given the unimaginable pain being suffered in these countries due to self-serving foreign policies of some countries.

But the general message of hate is extremely dangerous for impressionable minds and very irresponsible for a very senior Imam. Do you agree?

Zaheer Mirza Dear Rudolf Faix ... There is not much room for misinterpretation regarding the potential grave intended and unintended consequences of such generalised words. We need to understand the motive and the intent - we need to see and condemn the root causes that fuel such words - only then moderate Muslims will condemn use of such inflammatory words/actions (even in this mini united nations that we have here). The audience of those words are all Muslims who are celebrating Eid whilst being very sad at the immense suffering of other Muslims. In my view the building of bridge amongst moderates needs to start from both ends of the divide. Western non-Muslim moderates need to realise that innocent Muslims are suffering due to foreign policies of their governments + with that support, Muslim moderates need to realise that reacting in non-Islamic manner is not the solution and condemn all such words and actions. Weniger anzeigen

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq Salam (peace) and greetings.

There are those who want to present Islam as a "religion of peace" and those who want to present or view Islam as a "religion of violence". Any such labeling is reductionist and is not very helpful to understand and assess Islam. For a long articulation, I wrote an article "Toward Understanding Muhammad: Some Issues in Peace and Violence" [downloadable from <http://ssrn.com/abstract=1760004>]. However, I have been informed that many readers might not be inclined to read long articles, and therefore I am going to try to address the matter in short comments, but sequenced for referencing for follow up comments. Weniger anzeigen

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq 1. Mr. Faix's concern is somewhat valid. Such statements coming from a top scholar during the largest annual Muslim gathering is to have impact, and therefore cannot be dismissed so easily. However, there are a few things to keep in mind.

a. Saudi Arabia, as a country, emerged as part of the pact between Wahabi obscurantism and the colonial machinations. One should not expect proper representation or reflection of Islam in the Kingdom. Indeed, for anyone who wants to know and understand Islam, including in contemporary context, should take this as a default what the practices (except rituals) and views observed in and coming from this Kingdom is just the opposite to what Islam teaches.

Weniger anzeigen

Gefällt mir

1 Tag

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq b. How can we then explain such views from top scholars like al-Sudais? Well, in most respects these scholars are vanguards of extremist Islamic persuasion.

However, their understanding being extremist and obscurantist does not mean that most of them act on their understanding. Responding to the global dynamics and powerplays that have both external and internal dimension, some fringe groups do act on extremist views and rhetoric. That's why it is not enough to condemn those who act, but Muslims also need to be careful and vigilant about those within the Muslim world who lack the balance Islam demands.

Weniger anzeigen

Gefällt mir

1 Tag

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq c. There is also a confusion between extremism leading to terrorism and the struggle of those who are seeking to bring about changes in their societies, whether that involves removing internal tyranny or foreign intervention. Unfortunately, when scholars like al-Sudais speak, they narrowly articulate views that reflect the Kingdom's official line. Thus, when he is referring to Jihadists in Yemen, Syria and Iraq, he is addressing in terms of the faultline between Saudi Arabia and Iran, where Saudi backed forces have locked horn against Iran backed or supported forces. This is really not a principled position to bring peace and justice in those regions. Instead, here the prayer is for the victory of the side that Al-Sudais identifies with according to the Kingdom's official line. Weniger anzeigen

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq d. It is important that the term Jihad is properly understood and used by all sides. I have not heard the khutbah directly. But where the translation "Jihadists" is being used, I presume al-Sudais used the term "Mujahideen".

Jihad is to be understood as the full spectrum of human endeavor for making oneself and the society better. Yes, sometimes it involves engagement in the battle field, but all such engagements are subject to the Islamic rules and values of engagement. Such rules include non-aggression, striving to seek peace and find ways to avoid conflict, and even in the battle field actions must not harm the non-combatants, etc. (Due to shortage of space, the answer cannot be comprehensive here).

What we are seeing today as Jihadists, these are groups who are often vigilantes that are targeting civilians or non-combatants, which is contrary to Islam. Weniger anzeigen

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq 2. Coming back to the specific address of al-Sudais, for those who really want to understand Islam need to know that throughout history acts have been committed, things have been said and views have been expressed that are not consistent with the teachings of the Qur'an and Muhammad. So, it does not really matter how important or well-known or well-positioned a person is (e.g., al-Sudais), Muslims are dutybound not to blindly accept or adhere to such views. Instead, they should always refer to the Qur'an and the life of the prophet Muhammad for guiding principles.

There still would be gap between those guiding principles and how the adherents ultimately act. That's an unfortunately reality. Weniger anzeigen

We need to stop addressing symptoms ... we need to go to root causes. What roles did various governments play to stop people becoming homeless?

These refugees were living in environments very different to what they have found themselves in post migrating to Europe. It does not take a scientist to conclude that you can't expect very controlled people to find complete freedom and have no negative consequences.

This is similar to another simple reality that so many seem unable to comprehend - you can't eliminate terrorism by war. We all have seen the picture of the child who was dragged from the rubble - what will he become?

Here is what i found to date. That we are all just human beings. We all have basic needs to live. Human beings who have been abused and/or marginalized will feel and react in a simular way. Here we have many Religions, too many to count, but each retreats to their own group and basically operate and live together but yet isolate themselves as they believe only they know the real truth. I think i do not care that they behave this way as long as they are not harming anyone else. Should they choose to fight among themselves, so be it. I will just watch as i have no interest. You'll find an incomplete list of Islamic terror attacks at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_Islamist_terrorist_attacks These list there starts 1983. I have been at this time 23 years old. Zaheer Mirza We are here to not to discuss religions - but the behaviours of people that impact others in a negative manner. For those behaviours we need to understand the drivers. Please stay focused on that. This is the only reason this particular thread was acceptable, as there was implication that Imam's words might cause some impressionable minds to do irresponsible acts. The role of foreign policies of western governments can be argued to be a driver for refugees and creation of terrorists. What drives those foreign policies is also worth studying. But all of it needs to be educational and respectful ... please. Weniger anzeigen

Arshad Hameed Khan Rudolf Faix . Islam is a religion of peace is not a bad joke. But yes u can say there r many Muslims who r making a joke of Islam . Religion is a big problem when I wish to speak to u as a human . Every religion at some point will not answer a question whereas a question demands answer . Religions have also become a sort of business so it's best to keep religion out of equations . Those who commit crimes r criminals so let's deal with criminals like we should be . They take shelter of Islam and draw their strenght from religion they recruit in the name of Islam so it's not wise to give them shelter of religion rather they must be denied that strength Weniger anzeigen

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq Salam (peace), Mr. Aubin.
You have added a few important dimensions to this discussion. Let me identify and acknowledge those.

a. Preconceive notions: We all (me included) grow up and have preconceived notions. In seeking truth or understanding, we need to be conscious of our own preconceived notions. This requires self-criticism and it should begin with what we ourselves have as preconceived notions. [Part 1 of 4]

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq b. Our human nature:
Yes, we do have basic needs and at the human level we have remarkable similarity in feeling and reacting under similar circumstances. However, when we evaluate others, we use double standard. Consider, for example, what the Zionists did against the British when they were seeking to establish their own state of Israel, which they demanded that it must be in Palestine. They were officially listed as "terrorists". Jews (as well as others) were done grievous wrongs during the Nazi era and especially in the holocaust. Today those who are dispossessed in Palestine are the terrorists, including the unarmed civilians, and they are receiving like what the Jews received from the Nazis. It does not have to be this way. For further illumination, please read a brief article: "Israel, Bike and Our Moral Choice"

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq c. Baseline attitude:

"i do not care that they behave this way as long as they are not harming anyone else." This is very important. Others can refer to their own sources: For Muslims, there is an essential normative principle as stated in the Qur'an: "Let there be no hostility except those who practice oppression/injustice (zulm)." [2:193] As a Muslim I can't have any hostility against anyone, whether Jew, Christian, animist, atheist, or communist. I would of course have problem with even Muslims if they practice oppression. Unfortunately, many Muslims do not succeed in upholding this baseline principle of universal relevance. [Part 3 of 4]

Dr. Mohammad Omar Farooq d. One humanity:

As human beings we seem to be parochial by nature and are unable to think at the level of humanity and connect with the humanity. The way we cling to, defend, and stand up for our narrowly defined group (e.g., family, nation, ethnicity, organizations), we are unable to do the same at the level of humanity. If we could, if Jews and Palestinians could see each other as one family – humanity – the world will be quite different. If the colonizers could see the colonized as part of the same family, the history would have been different. The Qur'an provides another value – humanity orientation, as it reminds the Muslims that they are "created for the humanity" [3:110]. Unfortunately, this vision of serving and being a model for the humanity has not taken the kind of root the Qur'an expects. We need to have a sense of belonging to and serving the humanity, than dominating it.

Kimberli Smith I think RELIGION has destroyed "us" on so many levels:) If you look back in history, Christians have killed for centuries. If you think about it.....Many people chose to ignore this fact. On a different page, we have people who claim to be Muslim and they have put a bad taste in our mouth for many reasons-First, the 9-11 Tragedy was the beginning of a War that never seems to end. Second, the media doesn't always get the story straight and we are only given PART OF THE STORY. I don't know....I have so many mixed emotions on this subject. What I do know is this: we have so many "good" and "bad" people from all walks of religion. I guess is up to all of us in order to find common ground and work together for the betterment of all humanity. We may not agree on politcs or religion-; however, we can begin to RESPECT our differences and work together. Until this happens, we will continue to have WAR at the hands of Politics/Religion.

Like it or not, that is the truth!

Most important fact: Palestinians are being mistreated and they deserve to be treated with respect!

So, to answer the question.....Although I am not Muslim, I feel that Islam is not a joke. I guess I am beginning to see the big picture as far as religion/politics Weniger anzeigen Rudolf Faix Each religion had his black time. Where the preachers animated the crowd to kill other believers, burn books, etc. Thank God that this time is over in the Western World, the right of freedom get found in each constitution and the religion has no power over the people. The Muslim leaders have still their power over the crowd and these leaders don't know the meaning of the word freedom. As long as leaders as the Saudi Grand Mufti Abdul-Aziz al-Shaykh have some power over the people there will never be peace between the Muslim world and other countries. Such people like Abdul-Aziz al-Shaykh are getting called religious fanatics. Something like it gets found in the following link has happened a few hundred years ago in the Christian world too.

Rudolf Faix Everybody can see that the development of the Islam goes the same way as the Christians. The difference is that the Christian world has already learned from their own mistakes and why shall they make now some steps back in their own development? Only for making some narrow-minded people happy? Giving such hate preachers more power over their followers? Sorry, but I think that the Muslims need first to clean up in their own rows, show that they are not coming with stone-age ideas and afterwards they can get taken serious from others. Weniger anzeigen

IF AND ONLY IF the speech of Imam Sudais is to be considered as a hate speech then the first thing that comes to mind is a saying that goes like if a Non Muslim commits crime he/she is blamed but if a Muslim commits crime Islam is blamed.

then again why would the sentence Islam is a peaceful religion be considered a bad joke if Islam condemns people who are treacherous, malicious and hypocrites? be it Christians, Jews or Muslims. I am not aware of any religions that wouldn't condemn such people.

And by the way who do you think Imam Sudais refers to as Hypocrites?. For your kind Information he is referring to those MUSLIMS who say they are Muslims but do not act upon the teachings of Islam.

there are two types of criticisms, positive & negative. positive criticism would be "I noticed that we have had some trouble communicating lately. What can we do to improve this?" An example of negative criticism is: "You haven't been communicating with me lately. What's your problem?" Weniger anzeigen

Zaheer Mirza Dear Rudolf ... let's not overlook the role western foreign policies have played in giving a platform to such Imams for delivering such messages ... root cause analysis is important.

The Imam is talking to the hurt being felt for the terrible suffering in a number of Muslim countries.

To understand the situation fully, let's also understand why the message landed.

I think building bridges between Muslim and Non-Muslim moderates will lead to challenging of such generalised messages.

Our group can do so much in this area as a mini united nations role model.

In my humble opinion:

- Non-Muslim moderates need to acknowledge the hurt caused by western foreign policies, and
- Muslim moderates must challenge the messages that can cause impressionable minds to contemplate reprehensible actions. Weniger anzeigen

Taking a verse in the Koran literally rather than symbolically, as is done by the majority of Muslim scholars, bin Baz in 1976 ruled that the Earth was flat and that it was a great blasphemy to suggest otherwise.
